'I want to be first Indigenous PM'

EXCLUSIVE

JAMIE WALKER ASSOCIATE EDITOR

Tremane Baxter-Edwards has a dream. It's as big as the vast, redrock Kimberley landscape, bold as can be.

The young Ngarinyin-Walmajarri man wants to be Australia's first Indigenous prime minister.

He's no fool. Tremane knows some people will scoff. Others might patronise him, which is even worse.

At 17, he has overcome enough of life's hurdles – financial hardship, the death of his beloved Pop, to cancer – to understand what it takes to defy the odds and, yes, the prejudice that attaches to someone of his heritage and tender years speaking so candidly about a towering ambition. He's not daunted. Never has been, never will be. Because this is Australia and in Australia an Aboriginal boy from a far-flung reach of Western Australia has as much right as anyone else to aspire to the highest elected office in the land. - Provided you're willing to work for it. And Tremane is. My word he is.

NATHAN DYER
Tremane Baxter-Edwards

"I am realistic and I am committed," he tells The Weekend Australian from his traditional country on the picturesque Chamberlain River.

"I want to be prime minister because that's the best way to change people's lives for the better. I'm not here to impose myself on others. I'm not here to, you know, to sugar-coat things. If you want to take me seriously, then please take me seriously.

Continued on Page 4

Think big: 'I want to be first Indigenous PM'

please take me seriously.

To very much represent the val-very much represent the val-use of a lot of forgotten people. I certainly represent the values of a marginalised person, because I've come from that position of margi-nalisation. Whether it's me as the first Indigenous prime minister or, hopefully, someone sooner, we should give that proposition the due it deserves.

nopetuity, someone sooner, we should give that proposition the due it deserves."

In the week of the 60th anniversary of this masthead's founding in 1964 by News Corp's chairman emeritus Rupert Murdoch - six decades of chroniciling the news from the marbet halls of power in Canberna to dusly Halls of the control of the digenous women in remote com-munities. Tony Koch, a five-time recipient of Australia's most cov-eted journalism prize, revealed in 2007 how the gang rape of a 10-year-old Aboriginal girl on Cape York Peninsula was compounded when none of her attackers was jailed.

jailed.
Expert writers Nicolas Roth-well, Stuart Rintoul, Paul Toohey, Michael McKenna and The Aus-tralian's incumbent Indigenous affairs correspondent, Paige Tay-lor, have delivered compelling in-sights into the challenges faced by First Nations people.

Turning point
Yet as gim reading as the federal government's annual Closing the Gap report makes, documenting the yawning chasm in living standards and life expectancy between Indigenous Australians and the rest of the community, progress has been made Faltering progress has been made Faltering progress has been made. But genuine progress all the same.

Aboriginal and Islander students are graduating from univerdents are graduating from univerdents are graduating from univer-

Aboriginal and Islander students. Aboriginal and Islander students have gradualing from university in record numbers to go into the law, medicine, engineering, social work and other key professions. Federal parliament now boasts eight Indigenous MPs and three senators.

The generation of activists who came of age during the triumphant 1967 referendum to count First Australians as full citizens and empower the commonwealth to enact specific laws in their favour threw themselves into a land rights campaign that culmi-

Teen with a big future ... Tremane Baxter-Edwards, clockwise from main, at El Questro station, with brother Keenan and grandmother Kathy O'Reeri; and with mother Georgina, sister Colleen and brother Malik nated in the High Court's historic Mabo decision on native title 32 years ago. New voices emerged and found

New voices emerged and found places in our pages columnist and community leader Noel Pearson, the fiery academic Marcia Langton, Alice Springs-based activist turned conservative-learning politician Bess Price and her Cambera-bound daughter, Jacinta Nampijinpa Price, now the federal opposition's spokewoman for Indigerous Australians, to name but a few who set the pace during last a rew who set the pace during last October's failed campaign to en-shrine an Indigenous voice in the Constitution.

Constitution. Importantly, they cast their nets wide. Pearson's whole-hearted critiques of welfare de-pendence are colour blind, like his championing of back-to-basics classroom teaching: personal responsibility is something all Australians need to take, he has long argued.

sponsionity is sometning all Australians need to take, he has long argued.

Editor-in-chief Michelle Gunn points out that both Socti Morrison and Anthony Albaness and Anthony Albanes or advised to the source of t the coverage of politics, business, the arts, culture and sport," Gunn says. "It is in the DNA of The Australian and The Weekend Australian."

Political future

Political future

Tremane certainly has politics in the blood. Two of his aunts have been elected to the West Australian parliament for the ALP Divina D'Anna representing the seat of Kimberley and Rosie Sahanna, the state upper house's first Individual of Kimberley and Rosie Sahanna, the state upper house's first Indianous Meritain of Kimberley Land Council, deeply versed in commended member of the Kimberley Land Council, deeply versed in consensations and powerment or ganisations and government or ganisations and government or ganisations. A smiling woman in her 60s, with an unhurried but commanding manner, she's been the constant in his life alongside his mother, Geografia, 42. Tremane's father, Sonny Baxter, a Walmajarri man whose traditional country colls into the Great Sandy Desert, left when he was three, after Tremane contracted a rare and virulent cancer. (They have reconstructed to the comment of the work of the comment of the work of the contracted a rare and virulent cancer. (They have reconstructed to the comment of the work of the comment of what transpired during his battle with Burkitt Imphona. a fast-growing form of member much of what transpired during his battle with Burkitt lym-phoma, a fast-growing form of Non-Hodgkin's lymphoma seat-ed in his shderman.

when diagnosed. He underwent number of the state of the stat

late afternoon light abruptly fades late afternoon light abruptly fades to black.

Pop showed Tremane where it was safe to swim, away from the lurking crocodiles, and how to harvest bush tucker.

He likes to think that he continues to walk in his grandfather's cloosteps. He found another mentor in Bill Thomas, a retired state Labor MP and government minister who entered his life while he was undergoing cancer treatment.

was undergoing cancer treatment, becoming his "guardian" in Perth. Tremane was six, perhaps seven, when Thomas gave him a

'I very much represent the values of a lot of forgotten people'

TREMANE BAXTER-EDWARDS INDIGENOUS TRENAGER

Learning on country

Pop had taken him on country in what's now the El Questro wilderness park, a former cattle station that has been handed back station that has been handed back to the Wilinggin Aboriginal Cor-poration under an Indigenous land use agreement with the WA government.

land use agreement government. The traditional owners were partied freehold title to 165,000ha of the reserve. It's a magical place, lush and green as the northern dry takes hold, scored by winding rivers and sand book on US presidents. Back then, Barack Obama was into his sec-ond term in the White House, fir-ing the boy's imagination. "I kind of asked Bill if we had had a black president and he said,

Education pathway

andomonter Kally O'Reet; and brought him to Aquinas College. Perth, where he has boarded for the past six years. (He says he enjoys the food. Honest,) It's hand to keep up with Tremane Living up to his childhood nickname of Buster, he's a whitriwind of energy. In addition to completing Year L's studies, he is working on a Certificate III in tourism to qualify as a tour guide in case he wants to do more with his holiday job at El Questro. His plan is to take a gap year there, before heading to university to pursue a law or husiness degree.

lar activities. Burney, the Minister for Indigenous Australians, ap-pointed him to the First Nations Reference Group advising the Al-banese government on its $700m Remote Jobs and Economic De-velopment progress. working on the national schoots reform agreement, putting him on a plane just about every other weekend during term for appoin-ments in Canberra or Sydney. "Itry to study or do my assign-ments in the hotel at night," he ths.

He sits in the WA youth parlia-ent and as putative deputy op-sition leader pursues an issue see to his beart; juvenile justice. The assembly is currently debat-ing a 6000-word bill he helped draft on youth offending, propos-ing expanded pathways to rehabilitation and jail diversion for

Helping his people

At home in Wyndlam, a predominantly Indigenous township of 800 haking at the mouth of the King River, 3800km north of Porth. Tremane is beavily involved in an Aborigian alyouth corporation that runs a range of services including a night patrol and counselling for troubled teens, this brother Malik, 20, is an apprentice mechanic at the workshop funded by the initiative.

They're proud that the town's shop funded by the initiative.
They're proud that the town's shop funded by the initiative.
They're proud that the town's shop funded by the initiative and down again over the past year on an ecololal evidence, bucking and down again over the past year on an ecololal evidence, bucking and down again over the past year on an ecololal evidence, bucking and down again over the past year on an ecololal evidence, bucking and down again over the past year on an ecololal evidence, bucking and down again over the past year on an ecololal evidence, bucking and down again over the past year on the past year on an ecololal evidence, bucking and down for the program with the big politicians and business leaders he gets to meet, and professes to have reded in several million oldlars in funding. He's an inveterate networker, keenly aware that it's as much who you know as what you know when it comes to getting things done. To borrow a phrase from Hillary Clinton – which he likes to do—It has a state of the past of the program with the people in order to get into the political arena sevel. Nama used to tell me, you have to have the right hop political form as well. Nama used to tell me, you have to have the right people in mind for the right thin jet to happen' and I would wonder what she meant. I am stating to understand

Powerful contacts

Powerful contacts
And if you think his contacts skew to one side politically, given the family connection to the ALP, think again. Former federal deputy Liberal leader and cabinet minister Fred Chaney, a longtime champion of Indigenous causes who presided on the National Native Title Tribunal after leaving politics, last year participated in a panel discussion on the voice or ganised by Tremane at Aquinas College Chaney's alma mater.
He came away deeply impressed House of Representatives Speaker Milton Dick is a fan, as are Senate President Sue Lines, former Wal treasurer and Rio Tinto director Ben Wyatt and Chaney's son, Michael, chief executive of corporate giant Wesfarmers each has a place in the young man's carefully-cultivated Merce at The Australian Comp.

Here at The Australian, Gunn network.

Here at The Australian, Gunn was so taken on meeting Tremane that she asked him to deliver the welcome to country address at our 60th Anniversary gala dinner in Sydney on July 25.

"There is something quite magnetic about him," she says. The says of the says. "If you can't imagine being prima insister, then you'll never be prime minister, I'm very happy be's got that Inm ind."

Chancy makes the point that Australia is a different country, a much better country, than it was when this newspaper first went to print in 1964.

Biding his time

Biding his time

Tremane isn't sure how he will break into politics or when or for whom. His aunts in state parliament are at him, of course, to join the ALP. The sooner the better, bey say, But he's in no hurry to pick a team.

"I have to be careful. I have to be," he repeats for emphasis. The want a future in politics and the moment I go with one side over the other is potentially the monent I go with one side over he other is potentially the more than the side of the other is potentially the more than the search of the other is potentially the more than the search of the more than the potential the search of the potential the search of the potential the search of the potential than the potential than the potential than the more than the more than the potential than the potential than the potential than the potential than the more than the potential than the more than the potential than the potential than the more than the more than the potential than the more than th ade. He thinks he could make a difrence after getting some experi-nce post-university in a rofession, maybe working for a traditional fore and culture with a quality mainstream education. "I'm at a stage of my life now where I understand the Western world but I very much understand my Aboriginal world as well," he explains. "I am also at a time where I understand how the city works and how networks work. But I'm not agoing to lose touch with my roots and values, which is coming from remote Australia. Some of the toughest people in this country are the people who come from remote and regional Australia.

Australia.

"And, you know, we don't have to look at the farmers to see that We can look at people like mysell who come from this area where we're paying three times (as much) for a loaf of bread. The curent prime minister would not nderstand that because ... Mr Al-anese hasn't lived in a place like banese hasn't lived in a place like this."

He accepts the Aboriginal way is the "quiet way", that some people, even his own people, might see tim as a bip-noter who's become too beg for his boots. But that o'N.
to the become
too beg for his boots. But that o'N.
ten to what he stoping and the doat the country he lowes.
He's fearless, all right. You should be at his age, before life, inevitable twists and setbacks and set all the place of the seed of the place of the seed of the seed of the he's fearless, all right. You should be at his age, before life,
what he's han, for one, can't help but worry about her bold and have grandion. 'He carries to much on his shoulders," she says quietly.

INDEPENDENT COMMISSIONER AGAINST CORRUPTION

The South Australian Attorney-General, the Honourable Kyam Maher MLC, invites expressions of interest for the role of Independent Commissioner Aga Corruption, South Australia.

Legal practitioners of at least 7 years standing and former judges of the High Court of Australia, the Federal Court of Australia or the Supreme Court of a State or Territory of the Commonwealth are eligible for appointment.

The Commissioner is responsible for the leadership of the Independent Commission Against Corruption which works to identify, investigate, prevent and minimise corruption in public administration, including through the referral of potential issues and proactive education initiatives.

The Commission's functions include:

- identifying and investigating corruption in public administration for referral to a law enforcement agency for investigation and prosecution
- evaluating the practices, policies and procedures of inquiry agencies and public authorities for the advancement of preventing or minimising corruption in publi administration
- conducting educational programs to prevent or minimise corruption in public
- reporting suspected misconduct or maladministration in public administration or other offences to the Office for Public Integrity, the Ombudsman or other law enforcement agency
- preparing an annual report to be delivered to Parliament.

The Commissioner is appointed for a term not exceeding 7 years on terms and conditions determined by Her Excellency the Governor and may be re-appointed for terms not exceeding 10 years in total.

To submit an expression of interest, visit https://www.agd.sa.gov.au/about-us/careers Enquiries: Ann Duff, Office of the Chief Executive, Attorney-General's Department ph: 08 7133 9020 email: ann.duff@sa.gov.au

Closing date for expressions of interest is 5pm ACST, Friday 2 August 2024.

Level/Salary: Specified Calling Level 1, $76,425 - $100,605 pa pro rata + Super - PSCSAA 2022 As a Child Protection Worker, you will work in the areas of child protection, children in care and family support. Soan this OR code to find out more about a career as a Child Protection Worker.

To Access Detailed Information: Visit www.iobs.wa.gov.au and key in the Web Search No.

Location: Geraldton and Carnaryon

ChemCentre

Director Scientific Services Division, ChemCentre

Salary: Specified Callings Level 6, $173, 101 - $185,716 pa

Location: Bentley, Western Australia

Scientific Services Division. You will have a critical role in leading, promoting and developing our analytical chemistry business to existing and emerging markets, and applying your exceptional communication skills to build collaborative elationships at a state, national and international level. If you are looking for the next step in your career, and possess the scientific and business acumen, then this is the job for you.

Applications close Wednesday 31 July 2024 at 5.00pm

To view the full advert and Job Description Form, please visit www.jobs.wa.gov.au and search position CC020175.